

THE EDGE

Dakota Jones

Volume #001

Nov 20th, 2011

Local High school Dropouts cut in half

At most schools you hear the sound of kids opening and closing their books but at a school in southern Carolina you hear the sound of knives sharpening.

This particular school had become irritated with its high number of dropouts so they took action. Not in a normal way, but in a samurai way. Yes actual samurais hired from overseas to "take care" of the dropouts. These highly trained warriors were being contracted out throughout the town.

The samurais sure left their mark in this southern town. Pretty soon the local dropouts were finding out that they were now in two. Yes cut in two parts the torso and the legs. they were perfectly fine but just in half.

An interview with a local dropout who experienced this first hand agreed to be interviewed. Jimmy Walker (ironic) had a samurai deal with him. "It was horrible" Jimmy told us, "I woke up and my legs were beside my bed with a note safety pinned to my pants saying 'GO BACK TO SCHOOL'. I still didn't go back I ain't never goin back."

Our news team heard over a dozen stories of the same tragic accident with the same note. We decided to go to the principal of the local high school and see what she had to say.

Mrs. Sharp, the school's principal agreed to be interviewed about these occurrences. "yes I'm aware of these recent accidents. I was the one who got those samurais to come here, Lord knows we have to many people dropping out." she explained. "I was just giving the students so extra incentive to continue their education and actually graduate. These samurais are doing a great job of keeping kids in school, I'm glad that they're here. Our dropout rate is going to reduce greatly."

We told Mrs. Sharp that cutting the dropouts in two actually doubled the number of dropouts and she refused to talk any longer.

People have a hard time deciding if these samurais are a good thing or if they are just a bad idea. It seems as if the decision is split down the middle.